A Relational vs. Money Approach

Typically, much of the estate planning world focuses on money. But the most successful estate plans are founded on relationships. Building and preserving family wealth isn't an end in itself. Rather, it's a tool for promoting shared family values or encouraging family members to lead responsible, productive, healthy lives. Drafting a family mission statement can be an effective way to define and communicate these values.

Communicating Clearly

Because each family is different, there's no cookie-cutter formula for drafting a family mission statement. The most important thing is for the statement to clearly articulate your family's shared values, whatever they may be.

Ideally, the mission statement will also create mechanisms for intrafamily communication and for putting the statement's ideas into action. For example, the statement might call for regular family meetings. Or it may create a governance structure for managing the family's wealth and making decisions about charitable giving and other endeavors.

Few families agree on everything. But facilitating communication and decision making in this way minimizes conflicts that can arise when family members don't know what's going on or feel they have no say. To make family meetings more efficient and effective, consider inviting outside advisors to lead or participate in the meetings.

A Principle Based Approach

Many people today are moving away from a rules-based approach to estate planning and embracing a principles-based approach. Rather than conditioning a child's inheritance on a rigid list of "acceptable" behaviors, for example, a principles-based approach allows greater flexibility for trustees and others to make decisions based on the values you wish to promote.

Estate Planning Basics

If you don't have a large estate or if you plan on leaving everything to your spouse or children, you may think estate planning is not necessary. Consider, however, that that estate planning simply refers to planning that concerns your bundle of assets and regardless of the size of your bundle, proper planning can help you avoid probate or save time and even reduce potential estate taxes.

So, to dispel another common misnomer, estate planning is about much more than tax avoidance. It is the process of exercising wise discretion over your assets throughout your life and beyond. Without it, the material resources life has afforded you the opportunity to accumulate (usually over many years) may not end up where you thought they would after you are gone.

When you die, someone will have to distribute your assets, care for surviving minor or disabled children, and make funeral and burial arrangements. If you become disabled, you may need someone to make sure your bills are paid, file your tax returns, and handle other legal and financial affairs.

If you do not have a plan in place, someone else will speak for you. It may be a friend, relative or other trusted acquaintance. However, the final say will be the government. Can you be sure they will adequately and appropriately carry out your wishes? Will their decisions honor your name, legacy and values in the way you would want?

By thinking through all of these issues today, you can begin to prepare for the long-term distribution of your property to family, friends and charitable interests, but more importantly, you can begin to prepare to pass down time honored values and traditions to empower future generations.

Clarifying What is Important to You

Before you create a last will or an estate plan, you need to determine what you want your estate plan to do. It is not a "one size fits all" process.

Distributing Your Property

No matter how wealthy or poor you consider yourself to be, everything you own will be distributed to others when you die. With proper planning, you can be sure things are to the people you choose. The initial step in the planning process is to take inventory of what you have, and then decide where you want it to go.

The Value of a Last Will

It's one thing to know how you want your property distributed and it is another thing to have the tools in place to make it happen. The most basic instrument in your estate plan is a valid last will ideally prepared by a seasoned attorney in your state of residence.

More than two-thirds of the American population die without a will.

The decision whether to make a will is an important step in ensuring those you love will get the maximum value from your estate. While there are no laws that require you to make a will, there are laws to dictate what happens to your estate if you don't.

Fortunately, you don't have to rely on your state's laws to make decisions for you. When you prepare a will, you can decide who will receive your property. Steps may also be taken to reduce expenses and speed up the process of distributing your property and these are reasons to opt with a seasoned attorney for preparing it.

Issues with Probate Court

Probate is the legal process of carrying out the instructions of a will. Depending on how much you own, you may want to reduce estate taxes and pro-bate issues. Probate proceedings become a matter of public record and also add to the costs of settling your estate. Taxes are typically not an issue unless you expect the value of your personal estate to exceed the federal tax exemption amount. However, if you desire to maintain confidentiality and keep certain aspects of your will out of the public record, a trust and other planning devices may be useful. Proper titling of assets is also an important step in transferring your estate.

The Value of a Trust

Maybe. Depending on the amount and type of assets you have, and the way you want to transferor shelter your assets, a trust may be a sound part of your planning process.

The basic idea of a trust involves the transfer of ownership of an asset to a trustee who will manage it. The trustee is then responsible for managing the asset in accordance with the instructions in the trust document.

Trusts can be funded with cash, stocks and bonds, real estate or other assets and offer a variety of benefits. A trust can provide income for life, valuable tax savings and the security of professional financial management with the ability to provide for a cause that is special to you. You may also avoid probate for assets in a trust. There are several different types of trusts and a qualified financial or legal advisor can help you determine which may work best for you.

Using a Revocable Living Trust

If your estate is complicated, you should consider a Revocable Living Trust as an addition to a will. With a living trust, you can transfer property to the trust while you are alive, but maintain control of your assets by naming yourself the trustee. When you die, your cotrustee or chosen successor would then manage the property and disburse your assets according to the specifications you lay out in the trust agreement.

Because it is revocable, you may change or terminate the trust at any time with certain conditions.

With a living trust, you keep clear of the costs, hassles and publicity of probate. One drawback is you must retitle any assets you want to put into a living trust, such as a house, in the name of the trust.

You should also consider the expense of setting up a Revocable Living Trust. The setup costs may not significantly offset any savings in probate fees and expenses.

Using a Credit Shelter Trust for Large Estates

This is an especially useful device for couples with very large estates under current tax laws. Under current tax law, individuals can transfer unlimited amounts to a surviving spouse without any estate tax considerations. How-ever, this may not totally avoid estate taxes on large amounts — it will simply delay the taxes until the surviving spouse's death.

By transferring all of your assets to your spouse, you don't take advantage of your personal unified tax credit or estate tax exemption. When your spouse dies, you can use his or her credit to avoid taxes on a portion of the remaining estate. How-ever, you've lost the combined value of using the individual exemptions.

With a Credit Shelter Trust (also called a Bypass Trust, AB Trust or Family Trust), you pass, in your will, an amount equal to the estate tax exemption to the trust, and pass the rest of your estate to your spouse. You can also specify how you want the trust to be used. For example, you can stipulate that income from the trust goes to your spouse and when he or he dies, the principal will be distributed among your children.

Since the remaining spouse can leave an additional amount, up to the current estate tax exemption amount, tax-free to your heirs, you and your spouse can effectively double the amount of your estate that is shielded from taxes by using this strategy.

Using a Charitable Trust

There are several trusts which may be useful for taking care of your needs while also allowing you to help others through a donation to a good cause. Two of the most common types are a Charitable Remainder Unitrust and a Charitable Remainder Annuity Trust.

A Charitable Remainder Unitrust offers real value if you are concerned about the effects of inflation on your retirement income. With this type of trust, you retain variable income for your lifetime or a fixed term of years, claim a current income tax deduction and make a future gift to a charity of your choosing when the remainder of your trust reverts to the charity at the time of your death.

With a Charitable Remainder Annuity Trust, you irrevocably transfer money or stock to a charity. At the time you create the trust, you and the charity agree to a fixed rate of return. The charity then invests the assets and pays you an income for life. At the time of your death, the remainder of the trust reverts to the charity.

What is the difference between a unitrust and an annuity trust? The unitrust pays income based on a fixed percentage, but on a variable amount. So if the unitrust investments perform well, income maybe increased. This also allows for long-term income growth. In addition, only a unitrust can be used when a gift of property is the asset used to fund the trust.

An annuity trust pays income based on a fixed percentage of a fixed amount. This means the donor will always know exactly what the income will be— the amount will never change. Because of this, donors who count on the security of a fixed income may like this kind of trust better.

If you have highly-appreciated assets such as common stock or property, utilization of a charitable trust can help you delay capital-gains taxes on the appreciation and put additional dollars to work. A portion of the income payments may be non-taxable to you or, at least, receive favorable tax treatment. You may also qualify for a current-year charitable deduction.

Appointing Fiduciaries

Any estate planning options require the appointment of an executor, administrator or trustee. This should be a person you trust who has a balance of personal skills, organizational ability and some financial knowledge.

This person will need to locate your will, handle the will through probate, collect and inventory your assets, pay debts against the estate, pay bills and taxes of the estate, prepare income tax returns for your final year and transfer property to beneficiaries.

Financially Support Loved Ones

When creating your estate plan, you may discover you would like to provide more for your loved ones—especially if your home is not yet paid for or if you would like to provide funding for your children's or grandchildren's education.

Various insurance options allow you to provide additional financial support to your loved ones should your existing property not sufficiently cover your long-term goals. Life insurance is just one tool for adding to the value of your estate.

Through proper ownership of the life insurance policies, or through the use of a Life Insurance Trust our plan can be structured to keep the proceeds out of your taxable base and remain non-taxable for your beneficiaries.

Caring for Minor and Disabled Beneficiaries

If you have any children who are minors and/or disabled, someone will need to take care of them when you die. By planning ahead, you can be sure they are taken care of by someone you trust.

Think about the type of life you want your children to have and identify any people you know who can provide that for them. Be sure to consult with the person(s) you choose to name as guardian(s). Also, be sure to name an alternate in case the primary guardian dies before you do or chooses not to serve.

You can also set aside assets in a trust that will provide the resources necessary to meet their ongoing needs.

Additional Questions Related to Care of Minors:

Who can provide the best physical and emotional care for my children?

Who will be the best role model for my children? Who has the financial means to support my children? Who has values and morals that most closely match my own?

Who is in sufficient health to provide adequate care? Who will most likely provide a stable, long-term home for my children?

Incapacity

Although we don't like to think about it, at some point we may not be able to make decisions for ourselves. If that happens, someone will have to make financial and health decisions for us. There are numerous organizations and resources available to guide you in the process of choosing someone to make health care decisions for you in the event you become incapacitated.

The Value of a Durable Power of Attorney

By signing a power of attorney, you can authorize another person to act on your behalf to perform any number of specified acts such as banking, real estate transactions, business operations and insurance and lawsuit management. There are two types of durable powers of attorney:

An "immediate power of attorney," which is not affected by your subsequent disability or incapacity, and,

A "springing power of attorney," which does not go into effect until you become disabled or incapacitated. It is this type that is most commonly incorporated into an estate plan.

Many states have now eliminated springing powers of attorney due to issues with abuse and enforcement.

The Importance of Healthcare Powers of Attorney

Health care powers of attorney (also known as health care proxies) recognize your right to appoint a health care agent you trust to decide about medical treatment in the event you become unable to decide personally. Unless you specify otherwise, the agent will have the same authority you would to decide about treatment. The authority encompasses the right to forego treatment or to consent for needed treatment.

The agent's authority begins only when a physician determines you have lost the capacity to decide about treatment.

Planning for Long Term Medical Care Costs

Today, people are living longer. Given a choice, most would prefer to enjoy their freedom and independence in the comfort and security of their own homes. There are times, however, when circum-stances require extended care either through home visitation by skilled medical personnel or a move to a long-term care facility.

When planning for the future, it may be advisable to include a discussion about the possibility of long-term care becoming a reality for you or your spouse. It does not need to create worry. Instead, use your discussion to help guide you in decisions about insurance, cash flow and Medicare issues.

Planning clearly for funeral and burial

By clearly identifying your funeral and burial wishes, you can ease the strain and burden on your loved ones at what will already be a stressful time in their lives.

Although these instructions can be included in your will, it is better to write them out, if desired, in a separate document.

Unless your will is easy to locate and all parties are aware of your instructions in the will, there may not be time to assure your wishes are fulfilled. It is also a good idea to discuss these matters with family ahead of time to provide a verbal, as well as a written, expression of your desires.

Gifting Now to Downsize Estate

Do you really need to accumulate every-thing until you die? Are you taking advantage of the annual exclusion for gift giving to others? Have you explored ways to utilize your resources for ministry and mission purposes now?

The Value of an Experienced Attorney

No, just like you don't "have" to call a plumber to fix a leaky faucet or contact an electrician to install a light fixture. However, ask if you are really better off doing it yourself.

The most common reason for not wanting to use an attorney is to avoid paying legal fees. Typically, depending on your location and the attorney you choose, to have a will drafted along with a durable power of attorney and health care directive, you can expect to pay between $1000–2000.

Trusts can run two to three times that much or more. If you have a very simple estate without any complex ownership or transfer issues, you may be able to create some of your own documents as long as you make sure they meet the legal requirements of your state of residence. There are materials on the market and information on the internet that can help you in your process.

However, consider how an investment of a few hundred dollars may save you much more than that should you overlook something. If you have minor and/or disabled children, if you own property in multiple states, if you own a business, if you've been married more than once or if you have unique circumstances of any kind, a competent professional could prove to be a bargain in the long run.

Wise counsel, at a reasonable fee, may also spare your family and other loved ones a lot of heartache when they are faced with the reality of the disposition of your estate.

The key is to understand what we can do ourselves and when it is necessary to call on an outside party with the expertise we need. If you utilize an attorney, you can still save some money in the process. Just be sure to have your records and intentions well-organized. Know what you have and what you want to do with it. Get as much helpful information as you can in advance. That way, your attorney doesn't have to "keep the meter running" just for the purposes of helping you get your information in order.

Starting Your Estate Planning

The sooner you get started, the sooner you are prepared to take care of your needs and the needs of your loved ones.

Reviewing Your Estate Planning

Any time you have a significant life event, you should take a look at your documents. This includes any time you move, change jobs, sell or buy a home, or experience a birth, death or marriage in your family. If your financial situation changes substantially or if you are considering changes to your administrators, successor trustees or beneficiaries, pull out your documents and review them. Even if you don't have any major changes, you should go over your plans every three to four years just to make sure they say what you currently intend to say.

If you have a Revocable Living Trust, be sure to title your assets correctly in the name of the trust to avoid problems later. This process is often referred to as "trust funding".

Keep in mind that irrevocable documents generally cannot be changed after you execute them.

First Planning Steps

The evaluation sections immediately following this one will help you begin to organize your physical assets. These sections are intentionally situated to start the process because we've found that getting clear about the tangible assets can be a bridge leading to discussing deeper considerations such as personal priorities and values which will follow in latter sections.

Summary of legal tools available to help you meet your estate planning goals.

Although wills are the most common estate planning tools, there are many others — each with a specific function — that help ensure your intentions are carried out the way you want. Some are more complex than others and each requires a different level of expertise. Also, because each tool serves a specific purpose, the ones that are right for you depend entirely on your specific estate planning needs.

-  Last Wills are used primarily to distribute property, although they also are used to appoint guardians for minor and/or disabled children. For a will, you assign an executor (the person who handles the administration) to lead your will through probate (the legal process for validating and implementing your will).
- Codicils are amendments to existing wills. Sometimes it is easier and less expensive to write a minor change as a separate document than to rewrite your entire will.
- Trusts are financial tools that help reduce estate taxes and control the assets distributed to your heirs, especially if you have children who are minors. For any trust, you must appoint a person to manage it. This person is called the trustee.
- *Warious insurance options allow you to provide additional financial support to your loved ones should your existing property not sufficiently cover your long-term goals.
-  Inter Vivos gifts are gifts that you give while you are still alive. By reducing the size of your estate before you die, it will be easier to distribute assets later.
- When you assign someone with power of attorney, you give them the right to make financial decisions on your behalf. These can be given at any time, but are typically designed to go into effect if you become incapacitated.
-  Healthcare Powers of Attorney are like regular powers of attorney, except they give the person the right to make health care decisions for you, not financial decisions.
-  Living Wills are documents that clearly state your wishes for medical care in case of incapacitation. These generally include instructions as to what treatments to administer or withhold.
-  Funeral Directives typically state your wishes so your family does not need to make those decisions for you during their period of mourning.
